TINLEY MAIL MAN CAUGHT BY U. S.

Frank Francis, Rural Carrier In Trouble With Uncle Sam

Frank Francis, rural mail carrier on route 2 operating out of the Tinley Park post office was arrested at the Tinley Park post office last Thursday morning by a United States marshal on charges preferred against him by the postal officials. He was taken to the Federal building in Chicago and was later released on a $1000 bond. On what charges he was arrested and who went his bonds the postal officials have not divulged.

Several weeks ago Francis was arrested on a county charge in which an auto license figured and he was fined $5 and costs.

About a year ago Francis got in bad with the Ku Klux Klan and one night a big delegation of Klansmen came to Tinley Park and burned a fire cross in front of his residence as a warning.

It is said that Francis has a big stand in with some of the big politicians in Chicago.

Church to Celebrate 700th Anniversary

Mrs. Chas. Olson of Mokena has received a rather unique and very interesting notice of the seven hundredth anniversary of the Swedish Lutheran church at Wisby, Sweden. Mrs. Olson was baptised, confirmed and married in this church. This edifice was built in the 12th century. The building is of stone and is very massive. There are a number of old cathedrals and churches in Sweden all dating back many hundreds of years.

Autos Smashed In Collision

While driving northward in his auto John Fitterer of Frankfort met with a bad auto smash as he was crossing the Lincolnway when a car driven by J. C. Adams of Joliet ran into him. Both cars were damaged, the Joliet car being a lighter car suffered the most. Who was at fault has not been said. No one was hurt.

Must Pay Vehicle Tax Says Board

The village dads of Mokena have a problem on their hands, just now relative to the enforcement of the village ordinance regarding auto license. The ordinance provides all owners of autos in the village limits must pay a special village license of $5 per year. At present there are a number of auto owners in the village limits who have failed to take out such license although they have been repeatedly notified to do so. The village officials did not wish to appear hard boiled so they have been lenient with the offenders, but the limit has been reached and if the licenses are not taken out by July first there will be arrests and court trials to enforce the ordinance in question.

A Bad Boy

By Clifford Mahoney

There lived a boy in my home town, On his face he wore a frown; He always seemed to have a grouch He walked with an awful slouch, He hunted birds nests and killed little birds; To do something cruel he needed no urge; Out of life he will get no joy, Because it never pays to be a bad boy.

Can You Beat It?

Consider the editor! A child is born unto the wife of a merchant in town. The physician getteth 25 plunks. The editor writteth a stick and a half and telleth the multitude that the child tippeth the beam at nine pounds. Yea, he lieth even as a centurion. And the proud father giveth him a Cremona.

Behold, the young one groweth up and graduateth. And the editor putteth two score and four iron men. Yea, a peach of a notice. He telleth of the wisdom of the young woman and of her exceeding comeliness. Like unto the roses of Sharon is she, and her gown is played up to beat the band. And the dress maker getteth two score and four iron men. And the editor getteth a note of thanks from the sweet girl graduate.

And the daughter goeth on a journey. And the editor throweth himself on the story of the farewell party. It runneth a solid column. And the fair one remembereth him from afar with a picture postal card that costeth six for a jitney.

Behold, she returneth, and the youth of the town fall down and worship. She picketh one and lo, she picketh a lemon. But the editor calleth him one of our promising young men and getteth away with it. And they sent unto the editor a bid to the wedding, and BEHOLD the bids are printed in a far city.

Flowery and long is the wedding notice which the editor printeth. The minister getteth his bit. The editor printeth a death notice, two columns of obituary three lodge notices, a cubit of poetry and a card of thanks. And he forgetteth the darned thing cometh out "Gone to Her Last Roosting Place."

And all that are akin to the deceased jumpeth on the editor with exceeding great jumps. And they pulleth out their ads and cancelleth their subs, and they swing the hammer even unto the third and fourth generations.—Exchange.

Suburban Church Meet at Oak Lawn

The Southwest-Suburban Church Night meeting was held at Orland last week. After the supper and social hour, the four classes in training for leadership met. The members of these classes state that they are gaining many good ideas which are of help to them in their church work. Dr. Gammell of the Congregational Board of Religious Education made the address of the evening.

An interesting short talk on "Music in the Church" was given by Rev. Fultz of Evanston and a one reel motion picture on "The Twenty-third Psalm" was shown. The meeting this week was held at the Presbyterian Church of Palos Park. The Ladies of the church served a picnic supper. Dr. Jewell of the Religious Education Council of the Church Federation of Chicago will be the speaker of the evening. Anyone interested is cordially invited to attend. The next meeting will be held next week at the Congregational Church, Oak Lawn. Day morning of last week shirdhrid

Car Stolen From Frankfort Grove

Considerable excitement was created at the picnic held at Borman grove north of Frankfort last Saturday night when a Ford Sedan belonging to a Mr. Yunker of Hammond, Ind., was stolen from the grounds 20 minutes after he had left the car. Health and Home

ICED DRINKS IN THE SUMMER

On a warm and sultry summer day, there is nothing more refreshing to the mind and to the body than an iced drink. Of course, when such drinks are being used, moderation should be practiced, because if taken in excess or too rapidly, they are liable to be injurious to the stomach. However, when taken in a sensible manner, they are refreshing and beneficial to the fatigued. In the manufacture of these drinks, care should be taken to avoid any combination that may be indigestible or hard to assimilate. The drink should be consumed in a slow and leisurely manner.

The greatest danger present in the use of iced drinks is the one that involves the use of ingredients that are possibly impure or contaminated in any way. This is very liable to happen if the juices that are used are allowed to stand until they become soured and unfit for use, or if the milk or other ingredient used is not strictly fresh. The predisposition of milk to spoil quickly at summer temperatures makes it oftentimes necessary to use evaporated milk, which after all is just pure fresh milk with more than half the water taken away. It is sterile and, therefore, always safe. For use in iced drinks, it is ideal.

Following are several formulas used in the manufacture of iced beverages. If these formulas are followed religiously, the results will be found to be very satisfactory.

Chocolate Malted Milk.
1 cup evaporated milk
1 cup water
3 teaspoonfuls cocoa
2 teaspoonfuls malted milk

Mix cocoa with water until syrup is obtained. Put all ingredients in Mason jar and shake thoroughly and serve with chopped ice.

Sugar to suit
1 cup tea
2 tbsp. lemon juice
1 cup water
1/2 cup fruit juice (currant or berry preferred)

Boil slowly the cinnamon, a lemon rind and orange rind in water for ten minutes. Strain and when cool add the other ingredients. Place in a Mason fruit jar and shake well. Serve in tall glasses with chopped ice.

Egg Nog.
1 egg
Pinch salt
1/2 cup cold evaporated milk
1/2 cup ice water
Add salt to egg white and beat to a stiff froth. Add the sugar, the well beaten yolk of the egg and the fruit juice and nutmeg. Fill glass with milk and cold water. Sprinkle top with chopped nuts.

Palos Man Makes Makes Interesting Observations

Milwaukee, Wis. Letter, June 6, 1925.
Strolling along Chestnut street, Milwaukee today my attention was suddenly arrested by the name "Brisbane Hall" chiseled into the stone just above the front entrance.

Almost every man and woman that reads a newspaper published in the English language is familiar with the name of Arthur Brisbane the most brilliant and versatile Editorial writer in the United States today.

I was immediately curious to learn what relation if any, our present day Brisbane had to the naming of this hall which proved to be the Labor Temple of Milwaukee.

Inquiry developed that Brisbane Hall was named after Albert Brisbane who was the father of Arthur Brisbane and who was the first English Socialist in the United States.

Albert Brisbane was almost as prominent in his day as a writer, orator, philosopher and scientist as his son Arthur is in this day as a writer.

Albert Brisbane was born at Batavia New York August 22, 1809. His father James Brisbane, was one of the founders of Batavia, N. Y., and its first postmaster. Being a man of large resources for his day, the son Albert, was early sent to Europe to complete this education. There he came in contact with the brilliant radicals such as Ralet Owen of England and Fourier of France.

His philosophical cast of mind readily imbibed the ideals of these men and the group they represented.

He returned to the United States determined to give his life to the work of popularizing these ideals in his native country. As a very young man he wrote a volume entitled, "The Destiny of Man", which set forth Fourierism in a manner suitable for the Average American mind. This volume had a wide circulation and an influence difficult to measure.

Albert was a most charming conversationalist. His wealth, his beautiful face and his standing as an inventor and scientist, placed him in immediate contact with the strongest and most cultured men and women of that period.

History advises us that young Brisbane had a strong influence on the thought of Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, Daniel Webster, Stephen A. Douglas, Fred Douglas, Wm. H. Seeward, Thos. H. Burton, Wendell Phillips, Wm. Lloyd Garrison and many others of similar position—Horace Greeley, Chas. A. Dana, Wm. Henry Channing openly avowed their acceptance of the Fourier ideals and cooperated in establishing a colony at Ripon, Wis. It is said that the ruins of the old buildings erected by this first colony are pointed out to the traveler as one of the points of interest in that thriving little city today.

Experience quickly demonstrated that the humanitarian ideals of Fourier were not to be established by any scheme of Colonization, but ceipibly permeate the thought of that and future generations.

Fourier died October 15, 1837 and Albert Brisbane passed away at Richmond, Va., May 1, 1890.

No doubt the practical results of Albert Brisbane's work is noted in the public spirit that supports laws and regulations for hours and labor conditions for men, women and children, not only in our land, but in England, Continental Europe, and has even advanced conditions in Asia, Africa and South America, to a degree that even the idealist of 1850 would scarcely have dreamed.

No doubt the accidental planting of the Albert Brisbane propaganda in Wisconsin more than seventy-five years since, was figuratively speaking, the seed that grew the now famous "Wisconsin Idea."

Wisconsin has accomplished more different reforms along lines of social welfare, than any other of our forty eight states. This great good started with some pure mind.

SYNOPSIS

Out of uniform, at the end of the World war, with the rank of major, Peter DeWolfe, young American of wealth and family, is urged by an English comrade in arms, Everby Benham, to visit the Benham home and meet the Englishman's mother and sister, and, incidentally, Brena Selcoss, young woman about whom there is an air of mystery. Muriel Benham, Everby's sister, becomes infatuated with Peter, but he is interested only in the mysterious Brena Selcoss, of whom he has had only a glimpse. Muriel urges him to forget her, warning him that if she (Brena) should like him he is in danger of "vanishing—like the others." Peter gets a phone message from Brena to meet her. Peter meets Brena in a tea room and the meeting results in the formation of a strong bond of friendship.

"Yes, dear, I understand. I can resist you, Peter. It would be hard, but I could do it. I do not want to do it. The promise was for your sake, Peter. Not for mine alone."

"I've asked you nothing—no questions," he said, putting his hands upon each of her shoulders and holding her at arm's length.

"No, Peter, none."

"Because I did not care," said he.

"No matter what might come?"

"No matter what might come."

He drew her toward him and took a breath of the unperfumed fragrance of Brena Selcoss. And then, with eager, hungry yearning, expressed only through the restraints of tenderness and profound respect, as if indeed he had some ancient debt in his arms, he kissed her lips, he pressed his cheek into her hair, he touched the back of

"I love you," he said. "Can you understand all I mean by those plain words—I love you?"

"I love you, Peter?"

"You must never leave me now." She sprang back, tearing herself from him as if he had treacherously plunged a knife into her.

"Not that, Peter. Not that! I thought you knew. I thought this was—good-by."

Like one in great pain which must be borne in silence, she threw back her head and stood quivering and tense.

"You can't have misunderstood!" she said in a breaking voice. "Is this my punishment—that you have misunderstood?"

"I want you, Brena—forever. I could have sworn I never would want anyone—like this."

"Peter, it cannot be."

She seized his hand and, leaning over, pressed her wet cheek upon his wrist.

"It cannot be, Peter. It happened when I was no more myself—the one you know—than I am Muriel Benham. It happened when I was less than eighteen—seven years ago. I am married."

"Married?" he gasped, putting his other hand lightly upon her cheek. "Where, then, is he? How long ago did he—"

"Go?"

"Yes."

"Three years. I loathed him. I loathed his eternal flight."

"And where is he now?" he asked.

"I do not know."

She shuddered.

"He—"

"Vanished."

Peter was white. Breathing hard, he said, "You—Brena—will you tell me everything?"

"Yes, Peter—before I go. I will tell you everything. It will show you why I am afraid—for you."

CHAPTER V

Brena Selcoss had been born on American soil.

One of her most vivid memories was that of her father, an austere man, whose all his life long had carried about in the great and muscular body with its slow movements and its suggestion of latent giant power, a restless soul, ever seeking to find its way hither and thither like a strong giant ant of unceasing activity looking for new work.

She could remember dimly that her mother, whose hair never lost the red-gold Celtic glory until she and her second child died together when she was forty-two, had referred with whispered awe to the turbulent career of her husband, Demetrius. There were vague recollections of the mother's pride in the fact that he had risked and lost his career, begun so early in life and so brilliantly in chemical research and in a professorship in Athens, that he had tossed aside all consideration for him-some new application of his heroic, impractical head. In consequence, the little girl, red of cheeks, with spindling legs and great wondering brown eyes, never stayed long enough anywhere for acquaintance with children and for play. Tutors by her mother and by the booming, terrifying voice of Demetrius Selcoss when he, as he said, could spare time for it, she learned a taste for books and consumed them, according to her own story, "like a hungry little pig regardless of the wisdom of a diet and eating all that was within reach." The books served to give her a fake veneer of experience and maturity.

This outer covering was fake because it failed to represent the truth that Brena had reached sixteen, with physical attributes which made men turn as she passed but without any consciousness of having approached womanhood. Without contacts with childhood, ever on the move, living in hotels, in boarding houses, in suburban cottages, ever dependent upon one rickety patched old trunk and her two parents, she had acquired the habits of childlike dependence. Like a child she found that life was shaped without intervention of her own. She allowed herself to be dragged along with her mixed load of conceptions drawn from a helter-skelter reading. Among other conceptions was that eternal fiction of the gallant and perfect fairy story prince whose bride she would one day be. To be a bride meant little more in terms of real life than to become an angel.

"If I ever have a daughter," said Brena Selcoss, "I will never allow her to have this dangerous dream of a Prince Charming. It is the common foundation upon which girls throw sensible judgment to the four winds and come to critical moments without a thought of the flowing years of real life which are to come. It might have wrecked me when I was seventeen."

While Brena was seventeen, indeed, many landmarks had been set up in her development. Her mother had died quietly in bed the year before without a gasp of warning, without a murmur, a smile upon her engaging lips. Brena had been asleep in the next room, and Demetrius, having one of his spells of insomnia, sat almost all night long on the porch of their cottage in Dallas, Texas, in a rocker which squeaked a little as his bulk moved. He had come up at dawn to find his wife, with the first rays of summer sun thrown through the shutters and onto the happy, lifeless figure in bars of gold. It shimmered on her lovely hair; in all the red-gold mass there was not one strand of gray.

"Yes, Dear, I Understand. I Can Resist You, Peter. It Would Be Hard, but I Could Do It."

"This is the time for great calm," he had said to Brena, as he woke her with his giant's hand upon her shoulder. "The life has gone from your mother's beautiful body, my daughter, but she will live always with us because she was a brave and tender soul which endures forever."

"I thought that she had endless life," he said after a pause, burying his bearded face in his sun-browned hands. "It is the way with me always—I am unprepared—always unprepared."

This was the only flinching brought out in him by the death of the Irish girl he had adored so completely, to whose songs he had listened while his life went askew and in whose smiles he had warmed the chills of bitterness and whose arms had stilled the restlessness behind his great dark glowing eyes. He went on his way unchanged, but no doubt making new attempts to reach across the chasm which separated him from the yearning heart of his daughter.

These attempts were failures. Beside each other, when he was home, they were as persons alone; the one reminiscent, living in a past where great figures of history stalked majestically; the other expectant, with the eyes of youth turned away from the shadows and toward the glints of the future.

For three or more years before Mary Vaughn Selcoss had died, she had been alarmed by a new characteristic of her husband. In Dallas when he, who once had known the tang of great deeds done in a setting of romantic grandeur, came out through the hot streets on a common electric car and walked up a suburban avenue with its cheap bungalows and its phonographs, its lawn sprinklers trying to raise the sun-baked grass from the dead, and its concrete sidewalks, Brena's mother had noticed a look in his eyes of a haunting fear.

"I wonder what would become of you and Brena if anything happened to me," he had said in explanation.

"Nothing will happen to you," Brena's mother had gayly answered. "Come into the house. I've something to show you."

"To show me?"

"Yes—a happy little home with the rent all paid up till last February. Nothing will happen to you."

But the fear was written upon his countenance deeper and deeper, like a tracing often repeated. He said to his wife on one occasion, "You say this fear is new. No, dearest; I have carried it about for many, many years."

Long after her mother had gone Brena had seen that look in her father's eyes.

"Perhaps he is afraid he will lose his place with the oil company," she had said to herself many times.

Opportunity enough was given her in those days to speak for herself. She had gone beyond any school training not only in independence but in learning; nevertheless she remained a child—a lonely, sensitive child in the heart of her ripening womanhood. Her father's austerity and her own peculiar shyness made the pair appear to the Texan neighbors aloof, strange, like persons over whom some shadow hung. And her father considered alone? He too, even to her, was in spite of all his giant desire for tenderness, also aloof, strange, and over him some shadow also cast its menacing shape.

Perhaps this shadow was explained when Demetrius, the learned and impractical, the heroic and the humbled exiled gentleman of Athens, stepped in front of a moving train one evening as he was trying to cross the tracks which run through the Dallas streets, and then lay staring up at the sky, his hair and beard brushed back as if he faced a tempest.

It was the doctor who carried the news to Brena. He stood beside the engraving of the Acropolis in its frame battered with many packings and unpackings and many hangings and removals and many journeys in the bottoms of trunks.

"You do not weep?" he inquired.

"No," said Brena, looking at him with her blanched face.

The doctor was a little dried up southerner, whose manner straddled between his Kentucky birthright and the Prussian medical schools where he had acquired his education.

"He was a noble man," he said, "He was a haunted man, as well."

Brena said nothing.

"If he had lived another six months,

he would have been a great man," he reported you both then, eh? The public funds, I reckon."

The woman, who was still a child, shivered.

"He was sorely tempted—your father," said Doctor Gregory. "He had insured his life and he would have killed himself to provide for you. Yes, that was his plan. He asked me about it. Such a man! Hesitating to blow his brains out because of what? Honor. Not to defraud a soulless corporation, eh? Not doing it, either. Too virtuous! Too just! Splendid! Magnificent! Like his own forehead—noble, classic!"

Brena covered her face with her hands.

"Ah, well," said the doctor, "it was well to know such a man. You must be brave—a good girl, eh? Your father may have been killed in answer to his prayers. One cannot grope his way in front of a moving train."

"Did he die—without—a word?" she asked.

"No; I was going to speak of that," said Gregory, chewing harder than ever on his ever-present toothpick. "He was conscious for a time—quite conscious. He said that you never knew how much he loved you—some awkwardness, he said, prevented. He asked me to tell you that something would protect you from danger. He didn't say what. Something would. He said that you must not be afraid."

The doctor sighed and looked about the room with its few books, pictures, ornaments—the shabby remnants of a life of discriminating taste, high purposes and poverty.

"There isn't much for you to begin on," he said, reflectively. "Five hundred life insurance. The rest had gone because he didn't pay the premiums. Too honest to take it by blowing his brains out—a noble man—the timbers of a noble human craft deserving better of life's sea!"

He was proud of that phrase.

"I think you will find that Mrs. Wilkie on the corner will take you in for a while," he suggested. "You will find work."

Yes, Brena would find work. The granddaughter of the proud and intellectual Tom Vaughn, the daughter of the man who in America called himself Demetrius Selcoss, once the teacher of chemistry in the National Institution of Greece, who had the right to wear royal decoration and who bore on his body the marks of battles for liberty—she was now merely a girl alone in the world, without friends, money, background, training, experience. A great democracy had leveled her. Possessed only of that sun-ripened beauty of fruit coming into its prime with untouched bloom upon it, to which was added the charm and the dangers of immaturity and innocence, her assets were a hazard. Her mind and its capacities and its rich supply of academic learning were not currency which passed as legal tender among the persons she would know. Her father, who had said that he always met life unprepared, might well have added that he left it without provision.

Brena went to live with Mrs. Wilkie. She remembered that lady as an intensely practical woman who was always in a hurry. On haste, she had grown almost unpleasantly stout, and one of the disagreeable memories of Brena's tragic storehouse is the picture of this woman's absurdly small mouth, which would not stay fixed in one spot between her fat cheeks and her fat chin, but moved about, appearing to be located first here and then there, like a newly punched office. It never moved so unpleasantly as when she was talking of her ancestry, her relatives who had great wealth and her husband's injustice and brutality in making her give up society. Her husband had given up her society; he had gone to parts unknown. She brooded upon her fancy that she could have been a kind of dowager grandess if she had been born under a luckier star or had rejected Sam Wilkie.

She would not have been of any particular importance in the life of Brena Selcoss had it not been for two facts. One of them was that, lacking other distinction, she could have that of giving refuge at so much and so much for room and board per week to the most alluring young creature that, for the moment, was known to the male eyes of Dallas as an unsolved riddle. The other fact was that she was the half-sister of the mother of Jim Hennepin of Virginia.

Jim Hennepin, who liked to attach to his name the words "of Virginia," was the last of a line which had been brought to American soil by a refugee Huguenot connected distantly with the great explorer of the headwaters of the Mississippi. There are those who remember him in his escapades in Danville, and felt relief when his father, who had himself dissipated the small remainder of the Hennepin wealth and tobacco lands in futile speculations through a Washington broker, said to Jim, "You can go down to your mother's sister in Texas. She will put you up and I have a job all ready for you with a cotton buying and commission house in Dallas. There is nothing left in my own pockets. The only genius you have is for getting into trouble; your only talent is for figures. As time goes on the accountant is playing an ever-growing part in American business, just as the drunkard is playing a lesser part. Do you get my meaning, son?"

This accounted for the presence of Jim Hennepin in Texas. He had been there two years. Compton Parmelee & Co. had found nothing to criticize in his bookkeeping. In fact, it had qualities of genius which sometimes make bookkeeping not only a cold record, but a vitalized inspiration of business. Hennepin's club was useful addition to the club of the successful businessman. He considered his resignation to the effect of alcohol. He was a popular young man in Dallas, and the fact that so many men in that Texas city have now forgotten that they ever heard of this youth is only a commentary upon the truth that the impressions most of us make are not even fine scratches when time's roller has passed once or twice over men's memory and today has become so much more important than yesterday and that which is in sight covers that which is gone like new strata in a geological period.

It would be untrue to deny that Jim Hennepin was an attractive figure. If he had craft and viciousness, as some have said he had, it was belied by the Hennepin smile—an inviting smile, invoking the cheer of the moment like a smile of a boy. Furthermore, he was tall and graceful, like an oarsman in an English college eight. He was more like the bad son of an earl than a bookkeeper, and persons often inquired who he was, especially before they had heard him speak in his carefree modern American slang figures, and were surprised to find that he was older than he looked, had fought his education for several wasted years at the University of Virginia and was earning forty-three dollars a week and spending fifty-nine when he was over thirty.

Wild Creatures Die

Fast When Captives

The average person who visits a zoo for study and enjoyment often fails to realize the expert care and heavy expenditure demanded in its upkeep. Death takes a frequent toll among the animals and the birth rate cannot begin to make replacement. The four corners of the earth must be scoured or many an empty cage would confront visitors, says the New York Times.

Every month a proportion of the familiar animals die, and rare beasts and birds with strange names also succumb. Every month purchases are made that may range from 25 cents for a box tortoise to $900 for a pair of Gelada baboons.

Usually the highest mortality is among the birds. Next come the mammals, the severest financial loss. Reptile casualties are lowest. A report of the Bronx zoological park shows the death of twelve mammals, including a bonnet macaque and a white-faced snajou, of three reptiles, crocodile and two tortoises and fifty birds in a single month. However, the increasing skill of curators and keepers in the handling of wild animals is keeping the death rate within bounds.

Spent Six Years on Novel

Gustave Flaubert, leader of the French realistic school of writers, spent six years in writing his novel "Madame Bovary." Its publication in 1857 laid him open to accusations of immorality, from which he was cleared.

Popular Sentiment

Senator Wadsworth of New York said at a Washington banquet: "Russia won't be recognized by the American government till the American people demand its recognition—and the people make no such demand at present."

"A Red was orating one night from a soap box."

"There's famine in Russia," he shouted, "and our Bolshevik brothers are starving. Who will help them? Who will give them their meals?"

"Who," yelled a heckler, "will give them their deserts?"

If You Need a Medicine

You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited by those who are in need of it.

Druggist says: "Take for example, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a medicine which has cured thousands of cases of kidney trouble. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and inclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

Hard to Do

"Profiteers," said Magistrate Jean Norris at a dinner in New York, "are not very easily done. Sometimes it is their cunning that protects them. Sometimes again it is their ignorance."

"A poverty-stricken swell butted in on a profiteer one day and offered, for a good round sum, to supply the man with a coat of arms."

"But the profiteer turned the swell down cold."

"Nix, bo," he said. "I got more clothes now than I know what to do with."

Miles and Miles

The American mile is 1,760 yards, and so is the English mile. The Roman mile was 1,620 yards, and those in use at various times and in various places on the European continent ranged all the way from 1,100 to more than 12,000 yards. But the mile has been pretty much superseded in Europe by the kilometer, a unit of the metric system, and it is really the "European mile." A kilometer measures 3,280.8 feet, which is not quite five-eighths of a mile.

Chorus Girls Scarce

A dearth of good-looking chorus girls exists in England, theatrical managers say. One manager says more attractive girls are found in the shops than those seeking stage positions.

Issues Year Book
Local stockholders of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois are receiving copies of their company's 1925 Year Book. The Year Book, a beautifully printed and artistically arranged publication, contains a mass of information about the rapidly developing territory served by the company in northeastern Illinois. The company has over 25,000 stockholders each of whom will receive a copy.

Among the interesting features it contains airplane views taken in the territory last fall. Several of the company's plants and the residential and business sections of a number of cities are pictured.

The book also points out the number of customers served at the end of 1924 was 289,629 an increase of 12.1 per cent over 1923. This increase, in itself, is an indication of the stability and growth of business in the territory served.

The final pages of the publication list the company's stores, offices, electric generating stations, electric substations, gas manufacturing plants, heating plants and cities, towns and villages served.

NURSERY RHYME PUZZLE

LITTLE Polly Flinders,

And almost nipped her saucy little nose.

Find two of Polly's friends. Upper side down, on blouse; lower left on her down, on hair bow.

MEXICO DEFIANT IN REPLY TO U. S.

Calles Calls Kellogg Note "Threat to Sovereignty of His Nation."

Washington.—Mexico is determined to comply with its obligations under international law, but declines to "accept any foreign interference contrary to the right of sovereignty," President Calles declared in a formal statement made public by the Mexican embassy. The Calles declaration was a direct answer to the statement issued on Friday by Secretary of State Kellogg, who emphasized the assertion that protection must be given American rights in Mexico.

The Mexican executive's reply was made while President Coolidge was cruising aboard his yacht, the Mayflower, accompanied by Mr. Kellogg, General Pershing and Major General Le Jeune, commandant of the marine corps.

President Calles declared bluntly that it is the duty of his government to rectify Mr. Kellogg's "statement as required by truth and justice."

The Mexican leader expressed regret at "the contradiction found in Mr. Kellogg's statements when he declares that the United States has the greatest interest in the maintenance of order in Mexico and in the stability of her government and at the same time stating he has seen news of revolutionary movements."

President Calles characterized as "a threat to the sovereignty of Mexico" Mr. Kellogg's remark that the United States will continue to support the Mexican government only so long as it protects American interests and lives and complies with its international obligations.

This threat, the President said, Mexico "cannot overlook and rejects with all energy because she does not accord any foreign country the right to intervene in any form in her domestic affairs, nor is she disposed to subordinate her international relations to the exigencies of another country."

Any imputation that the government of Mexico is on trial as a defendant before the world is rejected "with energy" as in essence only "an insult," President Calles said.

Dentist Says He Killed Wife With Liquid Gas

Los Angeles, Cal.—The district attorney's office here announced that Dr. Thomas Young, dentist, has confessed that he killed his wife, Mrs. Grace Young, with liquid gas.

The district attorney's office quoted the dentist as saying that he killed his wife with liquid gas at their Beverly Glen cabin last February, and threw her body into a cistern, which he sealed with concrete with the assistance of Patrick Grogan, Jr., eighteen-year-old heir to the Grogan fortune.

Young said that the day after his marriage Mrs. Young announced she was going to "be the boss of this house." Immediately before the killing, he said, they engaged in a violent quarrel.

"She slapped my face," he said, "and broke my glasses."

Moors Wipe Out French Garrison; Retake Bibane

Madrid.—The strategically important fortress of Bibane has fallen into the hands of the Rifians again after a final vicious assault in which the entire garrison was wiped out, according to latest dispatches from the French zone in Morocco.

The garrison, consisting of a sergeant and 75 men, had held off repeated assaults of the tribesmen while the columns of Colonel Freydenberg and General Columbat struggled to relieve it. The Moors returned to the fray each time with increasing fury, and finally took the post with the loss of all its gallant defenders.

The post was burned after its capture, according to the advices received here.

President Refuses to Reduce Tariff on Sugar

Washington.—Because the present price of raw sugar is below the pre-war level; because a reduction in duty would mean putting the price below the cost of production on from 20 to 40 per cent of American farms now growing beets; because it is considered good policy to keep farmers raising beets, as otherwise they would go back to wheat, already in overproduction; and finally because the treasury needs the $135,000,000 of revenue, President Coolidge refused to reduce the sugar duty.

File Claims Against Mexico

Washington.—Six months additional time in which to file claims under terms of the general claims convention between the United States and Mexico has been filed by the American agent and is now under consideration by the commission appointed to settle claims of each country against the other. More than 3,000 claims have been presented by Americans for filing, according to an announcement made here.

Help That Achy Back!

Is backache making you miserable? Are you tired, nervous, "blue"—utterly played out? Have you suspected your kidneys? Your kidneys are the blood filters. ORLAND

Orland M. E. Church Notes.

Rev. M. S. Collins, Pastor

Friday June 19th will be an especially enjoyable evening for all members and friends of the church and their families. The Ladies Guild, under the direction of Mrs. James Creer, president, will serve one of their good suppers in the church parlors at 5 p. m. standard time. The service will be followed by a social. The motion picture show at 7:30. The picture is "Where The North Begins", a thrilling story of life in the Northern Wilds. The acting of Rin-Tin-Tin, this great police dog is an interesting feature of this film. Early in the show, a special number, a one-act drama, will be presented.

The picture for Friday June 26th is "The Hottentot", with Douglas McClean and Madge Bellamy. The picture derives its name from a spirited horse, and shows one of the most spectacular horse race ever filmed. Its full of laughs, too.

Both morning and evening services were very well attended last Sunday. The children presented a splendid Children's Day program on both they and their teachers deserve much commendation. The six reel picture, "The Stream of Life" which was given at the evening service, brought a splendid message, and was very favorably commented upon by many of those present. Next Sunday evening the sermon subject will be, "The Holy City." A one reel picture, "Garments of Jerusalem," will present many interesting side lights upon Bible scenes and oriental costumes, customs and habits. Next Sunday morning the pastor will begin a series of sermons on "The Meaning of Religion for a Modern Christian."

The annual Sunday School picnic will be held Saturday July 4th at the pleasant country home of Mr. and Mrs. David Agate.

Plans are being made for a Daily Vacation Church School for the children, which will start soon. Further announcement will be made later.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Loebe attended the commencement exercises at Northwestern University last Monday. Their son Roy received his B. S. degree and also a degree in Electrical Engineering. "About 40 guests" was a successful affair. Loebe gave a surprise party in honor of his graduation. Music, games and refreshments helped to make it a very pleasant evening.

Wm. Yunker has purchased a Hubmobile.

Miss Ersel Kettering graduated from Jennings Seminary at Aurora Illinois last Thursday. The following friends from Orland drove to Aurora to attend the commencement exercises: Mrs. David Agate and son George, Miss Harriett Austin, Mrs. John Loebe, Miss Clara Myrick and Mrs. M. H. Neumeier of Chicago who is spending a few days at the Agate home. Miss Kettering leaves Thursday for Hutchinson, Kansas where she will assist in the office work of Grace Hospital. On August 1st, she and her aunt, Miss Valetta Kettering, who is Superintendent of the hospital, will start on a trip to Colorado Springs where they will spend a month.

The following were callers at the Austin home last Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. John Hills, Mr. and Mrs. Pettycourt, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Hills and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Ray Henderson of Joliet and Mr. and Mrs. Henry McGregor, Walter Gerwig Jr., and Mable McGregor of Chicago.

Mr. Ralph Curtiss of Merengo, Ill., has been engaged as principal of the Orland grammar and high school. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois and received his Masters' degree at the University of Minnesota. He has been teaching at McNabb, Ill., during the school year just closed.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Myrick and Mrs. C. E. Fry of Chicago were guests at the R. G. Myrick home Sunday as were also Rev. and Mrs. Collins and daughter.

TINLEY PARK

Mrs. Mary Fulton has been engaged as principal of the Tinley Park school and Mrs. Sandrege of Chicago a former teacher of this school has been engaged to teach the intermediate room.

Mrs. Albert Ickstadt has been engaged as principal of the Oak Forest school for the ensuing term. She has done excellent work in bringing this school up to the high standard it enjoys now. Two more instructors have been added to the faculty for next year.

Mrs. I. Ickstadt who has been ill is convalescing nicely. Her husband is also improving.

Sunday afternoon a good looking young woman well dressed walked to Tinley Park from Gessellville on the concrete road. She attracted attention by her strange actions as she walked aimlessly up and down the streets. She stopped at the ice cream parlor and bought some ice cream. She appeared dazed and dopy like. When asked by Mrs. Dini where she was from she would not say. Later officer Fred Schmeidnecht asked her where she was going and she said she was going to walk to Harvey. She said she was married three months, that she had had trouble at home and walked away from home. She was taken to Harvey and turned over to the police there who sent a man to take her home to an address she had given. Later it was thought she may have been to a dance Saturday night and and might have been a victim of some tough fellows who probably threw her out of an auto along some country road.

The Tinley Park Parent Teachers Association of which Mrs. Ickstadt is president and which now has 41 members, has received its state charter and is now affiliated with the state organization.

Norman Wynam and Lonsaine Funk are ill with scarlet fever. Miss Mary Harper who has been ill with the same illness for several weeks is convalescing nicely. A nurse has been in attendance.

Elmer Keuch, motor cycle cop, is ill with an attack of pneumonia.

A play was given at the Saenger Hall Tuesday night by the local M. E. church to raise funds for the church.

The pupils of Mrs. Thoman will give a recital at the Saenger hall on Saturday night of this week.

McINTOSH COMPANY BOOM
OAK FOREST SUB-DIVISION

Oak Forest is enjoying a real building boom in the McIntosh subdivision known as the Ciceno Avenue subdivision. Quite a number of homes have been built and are in course of construction. This subdivision is being supplied with water now. Water mains are being laid and a big water tower similar to those in use in nearby towns is being erected.
